LABOR

One Woman's Work

Mary Fariba Afsari

Memoir

A powerful memoir of medicine, identity, and family secrets from an esteemed ob-gyn as she unravels her grandmother's mysterious death while reimagining women's health care from a mobile clinic—for readers of The Beauty in Breaking and The In-Between.

In Labor: One Woman's Work, Dr. Mary Afsari takes us on a deeply personal and transformative journey through her life as an ob-gyn. Set against the vivid backdrops of Portland, Oregon, and Shiraz, Iran, this powerful memoir intertwines the complexities of her professional life with the hidden truths of her family's past, exploring the intersection of medicine, identity, and the enduring search for agency.

The story begins in the bustling corridors of an Oregon hospital, where Mary dedicates herself wholeheartedly to her patients—often at great personal cost. At the same time, Mary uncovers a long-buried family secret: the tragic story of her grandmother Mehry's death in 1950s Iran. This revelation propels her on a quest to untangle the threads of her family's history while confronting the forces that have shaped her identity and her professional mission. As Mary struggles with the oppressive realities of the medical-industrial complex and the growing attacks on women's reproductive rights, she chooses a path of bold defiance. Inspired by her grandmother's legacy and her own commitment to compassionate care, she decides to take her work out of the hospital and on the road: she converts an RV into a mobile women's health clinic. This innovative act allows her to deliver personalized, critical reproductive health care services across the Pacific Northwest, creating community and enduring friendships along the way.

Labor is an intimate, immersive personal story, a rallying cry in a post-Roe world, and an inspiring example of what women can do when they do have a choice. Rich with the voices of her patients and the vibrant cultural threads of her Iranian heritage, Mary's story challenges us to rethink the boundaries of health care and reclaim the autonomy of women's bodies and lives.

Mary Fariba Afsari, DO, is a board-certified ob-gyn who founded FemForward Health in Portland, Oregon. She graduated from the University of Connecticut School of Medicine Obstetrics and Gynecology Residency and also holds a MS in health communication from Tufts University/Emerson College. She is the author of Labor: One Woman's Work.

THIS WAS FUNNIER IN CHINA

An American Comedian's Cross-Cultural Journey
Jesse Appell

Memoir

For readers of Vacationland, a hilarious, one-of-a-kind, fish-out-of-water travel memoir with an earnest Tuesdays with Morrie throughline, about an American comedian learning and performing comedy in China.

Jesse Appell is an American class clown, fresh out of Brandeis University and armed with a Fulbright Fellowship to study as a disciple of the legendary Chinese comedian Master Ding. When he lands in Beijing, he knows no one, claims a conversational level of Mandarin, and has everything to learn—about performing a new style of comedy, about China, and about the brass tacks of cross-cultural entertainment. From his time in Master Ding's Happy Classroom to his first forays into the tea house performance scene; from the night a tense immigration check turned into a comedy gossip session, to when he was forced to hitch a ride with the coast guard to catch a recently departed cruise ship, this immersive, fish-out-of-water memoir is a language learner's success story set against the bustling, political world of Chinese comedy.

Under the tutelage of Mater Ding and flanked by his fellow foreign disciples, Jesse hustles around China by foot, scooter, van, and boat, perfecting his comedy and learning crucial lessons about what it truly means to entertain. Hilarious and heartfelt, This Was Funnier in China captures an American's wide-eyed, enthusiastic experiences trying to build a future where we all laugh together.

SPIRITED

Alia Volz

Memoir

A singularly funny and moving memoir about the author's great-grandmother, who considered herself married to a ghost with whom she had ecstatic sex for 40 years until her death at 103, and the recordings she left behind—the effects of which the author follows through her eccentric family and into her own unconventional coming-of-age.

At the heart of the book is a haunting in Levittown, Long Island. That the ghost visiting Alia Volz's great-grandmother Paula was having daily ecstatic sexual encounters with her didn't make it any easier to believe. But believe it Paula did. For nearly forty years, she considered herself married to the ghost of a former lover named Ed Clayton—and even changed her legal name to Paula Long-Clayton. Paula, who lived to 103, communicated with Ed through a Ouija Board, but their primary interactions were sexual. Paula documented her supernatural romance in an audio-journal on cassette tape, which she gave to Alia on their last visit together. Alia, however, wanted nothing to do with that side of her family: not the ghost story; not her austere Grandmother, Jan, who was Paula's caretaker for many years; nor her own father Doug, who had failed Alia and her mother at key moments.

But when Alia falls in love and begins to think about starting her own family, she comes across a Sony Walkman in a thrift store with a note taped to it that read, "It works." As she listens to her great-grandmother's account six years after her death, she wrestles with this complicated and strange inheritance on her own terms. In the process, she discovers new means to think about being a woman, mother, and daughter—forever changing the way that she understands her family, and herself.

THE GREEN ROAD HOME

A Caddie's Adventures on the PGA Tour

Michael Bamberger

Sports/Biography

Gloriously available again, forty years after it was first published—now with a new introduction by Brad Faxon, a new afterword by the author, and a batch of newly discovered time-capsule photos—The Green Road Home is the classic account of a young caddie on the PGA Tour, and the book that launched Michael Bamberger as a bestselling author.

In 1985, Michael Bamberger was a twenty-something college grad and golf nut with a daunting dream: to become a caddie on the PGA Tour. His hope was to travel widely and deeply, to see the game up close and personal, and to be accepted into the vagabond guild of professional caddies. When the great golf writer Dan Jenkins heard about Bamberger's gig, he said, "Finally, an Ivy Leaguer carrying the bags of other people." Bamberger had his own take. He was looking for adventure. As William Least Heat-Moon had his blue highways, Bamberger had green ones.

The Green Road Home, first published in 1986, takes you inside the ropes, and inside the heads of the players Bamberger caddied for. You'll hang with the author in New York and New Orleans and Las Vegas. You'll get to know a wide range of golfers, legends like Al Geiberger (the first player on Tour to shoot 59) and George Archer (winner of the 1969 Masters), as well as Steve Elkington (future winner of the PGA Championship) and Bill Britton (future golf coach at Monmouth University). The author gets road and life advice from a colleague named Killer. He caddies in the US and British Opens and in the vicinity of Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson. He plays in the Tour's annual Caddie Classic golf tournament and the caddie-player softball game. The Green Road Home is a funny and heartfelt account of what it takes to make it as a touring pro—and as a touring caddie.

A COURSE CALLED HOME

Adventures of an Accidental Golf Course Owner

Tom Coyne

Sports

From Tom Coyne, the New York Times bestselling author of A Course Called America, comes a powerful new story five years in the making about a century-old golf course, the heart of a small town, and one man's journey to bring them both back to life.

Tom Coyne has made a career out of travelling the world and playing golf with a trilogy of bestselling books titled A Course Called Scotland, A Course Called Ireland, and A Course Called America. But after checking every iconic destination off his list, Coyne decided to see what he could find in his own backyard. When he stumbled across the dilapidated Sullivan County Golf Club in New York's Catskills, he wasn't looking to buy a golf course—he was just chasing a feeling. But in an unexpected twist, he became the owner of a historic course on the brink of ruin, and with it, the keeper of its past, present, and future.

A Course Called Home is Coyne's most personal and profound book yet—a heartfelt and often humorous chronicle of restoration, resilience, and finding purpose in unexpected places. It's a story about digging in—literally and figuratively—as Coyne trades tee times for tractor hours, learning to mow fairways, rake bunkers, and revive a course rich in history but fading from memory. The community that Coyne has found and cultivated is unlike the pristine, manicured version of the game you see on TV, played by millionaires in matching polos. The course is run by a tight-knit crew of groundskeepers who work long hours, not for prestige, but for pride. It's played by regulars and first-timers alike who pay in cash and play in jeans, and is a place where visitors quickly become part of the fold.

HISTORY

THIS VAST ENTERPRISE

A New History of Lewis & Clark

Craig Fehrman

History

A major revisionist history of the Lewis and Clark expedition: For the first time in a generation, This Vast Enterprise offers a fresh and more accurate account of one of the most important episodes in American history, humanizing forgotten figures and shattering long-held myths.

There is myth—Lewis and Clark as a timeless all-American epic, well suited for family vacations and high school history, two men going boldly where no one has gone before, our daring astronauts in canoes. This book offers a new and more accurate account of their journey by emphasizing three ideas. The first is that the early nineteenth century was a different and much darker time than our own. The second idea is that, in the early nineteenth century, Americans lusted for land. The third idea is the simplest: the success of Lewis and Clark depended on much more than just Lewis and Clark. It was a vast enterprise, a sprawling and federally funded military mission that involved a broad cast of characters.

Offering a new lens on the iconic journey of Lewis and Clark and the complex era they helped define, This Vast Enterprise is more than just a history book—it's a testament to the power of innovative research, and a thrilling reminder that even the most familiar stories can surprise us.

LIBERATION SUMMER

The Moment That Changed the Women's Movement and the Future of American Politics

Micki McElya

History

From Pulitzer Prize finalist and historian Micki McElya, the first complete, in-depth look at a critical but overlooked moment in our history—the road to the September 1968 dual protests of the Miss America and Miss Black America pageants in Atlantic City—and its lasting impact on the women's rights movements in America.

Of the many pivotal years in United States history studied and recreated by historians, journalists, and filmmakers, 1968, in particular, is widely recognized as a major turning point in the country's social and political trajectory. In just twelve months the US experienced the assassinations of Martin Luther King, Jr., and Robert Kennedy, the Tet Offensive and the rising intensity of the Vietnam War, the deadly riots at both the Republican and Democratic National Conventions, and the election of Richard Nixon, a president whose tenure would ultimately erode trust of government and authority to an uncomfortable degree. But these narratives usually omit another, equally important moment in the story of that unprecedented year: the summer that defined and determined the future of the women's liberation movement, culminating in the dual protest of the Miss America and Miss Black America Pageants on the boardwalks of Atlantic City.

Now, for the first time, Liberation Summer corrects this written historical record, offering a detailed account of the months of planning, debates, and decisions that led to the demonstrations, as well as the broader social and political landscape that gave rise to some of the most iconic women on both sides of the ideological spectrum, from Betty Friedan, Carol Hanisch, and Florynce Kennedy to Anita Bryant and Phyllis Schlafly. A sweeping saga of American history and culture, Liberation Summer presents a kaleidoscopic view of our nation on the brink of change, amidst the continuing quest for justice and gender equality.

ENDING CHRONIC ILLNESS

A Revolutionary New Program to Reverse Inflammation and Heal Persistent Disease

Richard Horowitz

Health

A New York Times bestselling doctor guides you through his revolutionary approach to solving the problem of chronic illness by finding what triggers the root cause: multiple sources of inflammation. This approach addresses a wide range of common but challenging conditions including autoimmune diseases, allergies, asthma, chronic pain, long covid, chronic fatigue, multiple sclerosis, Alzheimer's dementia, autism spectrum disorder, cancer, cardiovascular disease, hormonal dysfunction, mood disorders, and more.

Anyone with a chronic illness knows it can destroy your life. Symptoms for which no doctor can find a cause, or the treatment is worse than the disease itself. The alarming truth is that while traditional medicine is good at treating most acute illnesses, it has no effective model to address chronic conditions. Richard Horowitz has made it his mission to change that.

For decades, he has been helping to heal thousands of chronically ill patients. Now he brings us his proprietary program based on the Multiple Systemic Infectious Disease Syndrome (MSIDS) Map to identify and treat a wide array of chronic conditions based on new, cutting-edge scientific research. At the heart of every chronic condition lies inflammation, but where is it coming from? The 16-point diagnostic map provides clear answers and a treatment program tailored to your specific condition. You'll find out what tests you might need, with a comprehensive list of lifestyle strategies like how to beat insomnia and reduce stress in as little as five minutes. Dr. Horowitz also takes a deep dive into scientifically proven natural solutions available over the counter, like nutritional supplements, as well as examining the pros and cons of prescription medication, both for short and long term use.

Richard Horowitz is a board-certified MD specializing in Internal Medicine who is known for his pioneering work with Lyme disease and recognized as one of the country's foremost experts on chronic illness. Sex & Relationships

Esther Perel's Mating in Captivity (2006; sold in more than 20 international markets) and Chris Ryan's Sex at Dawn (2010) exposed the cracks in our modern monogamy-only relationship model and unlocked the door to the rest of the relationship landscape. But neither showed us how to find our way around. In fact, more than 10 years later, in her 2017 book, The State of Affairs: Rethinking Infidelity, Perel told us "Few social scripts exist. We are all improvising."

Vrangalova wants readers to do more than just improvise. "How do we find the relationship type that's right for us, and how do we make sure we're doing it well? Science finally has some concrete answers. All humans have two basic needs: security and exploration. To survive, we need to be physically and emotionally safe and secure; to grow, we need to be able to seek new experiences, to be challenged and surprised." Vrangalova offers insights on how to pursue both.
